A gentleman recentity established in pusiness in Paris, and for an officer in the United States army during the civil war, to c me the following story: Le was with his regiment on cuty in (. think) Tennessee, and was informed one day that the new y appointed commander of that division of the army was to arrive that cay, and would take possession of his command the next morning. Bar y on the following morning the officer chanced to be stancing on the bank of a stream near where the forces were encamped, when he saw on the other side of the water a sandy-bearded man on horseback, with a cigar between his teeth who was endeavoring to force his horse across a narrow woocen bridge that was thrown across the stream. The bridge had no railings and the planks were slippery with frost, so that the passage presented a certain amount of danger. The officer called to the stranger not to induce his horse to go over the bridge, when the other, waxing wroth at his obstinacy, shouted: "Turn paca, you—acjective fool Do you want to get ducked, or get crowned? Don't you see that the bridge is as slippery as glass?" The stranger, who wore a common blue army overcoat, raised his cap, turned around and galloped away. What was the officer's horror, a few ater, when, at the review pours of the troops by their new commancer, he recognized in the stranger General Grant. At the close of the review the general sent for nim and grave y addressed him as follows: You are the person who prevented me from venturing on the bridge this morning, Colonel -, are you not?" An affirmative response was given with a sinking heart. ". wished to tell you hast a am very much obliged to you. The French scientis; and Iskeptic, De Cancolle, has been making some original investigations which disclose results interesting and inspiring. The noted savant conclusivery shows that science and learning are specially indepted to the sons of clergymen. More than tals, he makes a strong argument against the cendacy of the clergy. As he came, "n c erical families, their manner of life, their quiet regularity, their residence largely in the country, their counsels to their calleren. the absence of various causes of cissipation, the habitual vigilance of the father, and his comestic example of study, surpassing the advantages of other families, give all the greater force to the transmission of faculties appropriate to cultivation of the sciences." Good test, mony from an ingeneucent source and a keen observer. De Canco le further afficies that the sons of clergymen have actually outnumbered, for 200 years, in their contributions to the ro, of eminent scientists, any other class of families, not excepting those of the directly scientific professions, physicians, surgeons and chemists. Among the sons of ministers he enumerates the fo owing: Agassiz, Linnaeus, Suler, Encke, za am, Sismonei, Jonathan Edwards, Whatey, the Wesleys, the Beechers and Spurgeons, Young, Cowper, Thomson, Co.eriege, Tennyson, Lowell, Loimes, Emerson, Charles Kings ey, Matthew Arno c, Maurice, Macau ay, Thackeray, Jancroff, Sir Caristopher Wren, a eremy Bentham, Dugald Stewart Swift, Sterne, Hazlitt. That is a good showing sure y for ministers' sons.

The following incident aptly illustrates wity the written sermon is in greater favor in cutivated circles and the unwritten sermon among the masses:

An English clergyman asked an unequeated woman whether she liked his written or unwritten sermons the best. After thinking a few moments, she said, "Why, _ lotte yo the best without the most, because yo keep saying the same thing over and over again; and that cea better.
